

I feel the real problem lies with the parents at this point. Why is it that everyone else has to pay because parents don't monitor their kids, or control what they will allow them watch, instead they want someone else to do the parenting for them and it's happening everywhere, no-one wants to take responsibility, they want to blame everyone else. As much as they complain, I guarantee you they do not monitor their kids activities, behaviors, or TV time, like they should, they won't even do it in public anymore, let alone in private. When I was growing up my parents monitored what I watched, and if it was too violent they picked something else. Most of my friends who are active participants in their children's lives watch a few minutes of the show first then decide if their children can watch it. If the child is allowed to watch adult shows, that is the parents' fault not the media, directors, or Hollywood, and we should not ALL have to pay the price for their laziness.
